Strong communications and collaboration between long-term care and acute care communities builds a foundation for success.

A fundamental aspect of our Foundation of Care is to act as the bridge to help long-term care facilities and hospitals. It's one of the keys to maintaining a healthy relationship between the long-term care facility and the hospital, and critical to delivering quality senior care.

We understand that assisting the long-term facility in caring for more clinically complex residents makes it more attractive to hospitals and health plans. That's why, in addition to assisting with direct patient care, PHS practitioners act as liaisons, vigilantly working with area hospitals to assure continuity of care for the patient.

Today, PHS is working diligently to foster those positive and collaborative relationships with a common goal shared by all: More positive outcomes for patients.
